

Experience Mali homestay

There's no better way to learn about local life than by spending time in a village, living at the compound of a local family and being part of their daily life

A homestay in a village is a special experience, which allows you to get in touch with the people and to learn about their daily lives. Staying with a family offers the chance to experience the country from the inside out.

In villages the day starts as soon as the sun rises. Compounds are being swept, cattle is taken care of, water is being collected at the nearest well and breakfast is being prepared. Family compounds are a great place to absorb and observe daily life. Once the sun sets life slows down and there won't be much activity on the compound after the evening meal.

You're offered the chance to stay with a local family in e.g. a pottery or a fishing village. The families have been carefully selected and will warmly welcome you and treat you with respect.

Whether you feel like observing village life or actively taking part in the daily chores, a homestay is a unique addition to your time in Mali.
